The Challenge

To source hard landscaping materials that met the aesthetic and functional requirements, as part of a series of landscape enhancement works at the University of Nottingham.

Landscape architecture practice, Munro + Whitten, were appointed to undertake the landscape design of the new theatre gardens.

The landscape design concept was carefully thought out as Sofia, Senior Landscape Architect at Munro Whitten, explained:

"We redesigned the area in front of the theatre entrance to give it a stronger and more suitable space for visitors to use before, during and after performances. The main benefit, of course was to make the space more usable and versatile component of the campus centre."

The Solution

It was important that the gardens would complement the refurbished theatre building and it was evident that a hard landscaping product with a contemporary aesthetic was required in order to achieve this.

Tobermore paving was the material of choice due to its bright colours and unique finishes available. Zsafia commented: "We always strive to specify the highest quality of materials to suit a space and its role. The University of Nottingham already had areas of Tobermore paving on its Park Campus and we decided to continue with a Tobermore product given the quality of finish and manufacture."

The Tobermore Midlands Sales team provided an expert advice service for Munro + Whitten in helping select the most appropriate paving solution. The landscape architect was particularly impressed with the modern granite aggregate finish of Fusion block paving and the eye-catching colour palette available.
